ABSTRACT

This bibliography presents representative literature pertaining to public concerns with environmental problems since the National Environmental Policy Act became law. Items cited deal with various aspects and manifestations of public concern. Items include: (1) sociological studies of the process of attitude formation; (2) attitude surveys; (3) opinion polls; (4) narrative descriptions of public reactions to specific environmental matters; (5) histories of the recent environmental movement; and (6) philosophical discussions of environmental ethics. The bibliography is divided into four sections: (1) Books; (2) Journal Articles; (3) Bibliographies; and (4) Miscellaneous. Standard bibliographic information is provided along with Library of Congress call numbers and brief annotations where needed. This bibliography was composed for use by legislators and their staffs but it may be of use to researchers, environmentalists, and others as well. (Author/MR)

CONGRESSIONAL RESEARCH SERVICE
LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

CRS

SE 025 406

The Congressional Research Service works exclusively for the Congress, conducting research, analyzing legislation, and providing information at the request of Committees, Members and their staffs.

The Service makes such research available, without partisan bias, in many forms including studies, reports, compilations, digests, and background briefings. Upon request, the CRS assists Committees in analyzing legislative proposals and issues, and in assessing the possible effects of these proposals and their alternatives. The Service's senior specialists and subject analysts are also available for personal consultations in their respective fields of expertise.

PUBLIC CONCERN WITH ENVIRONMENTAL PROBLEMS

A BIBLIOGRAPHY

Since January 1, 1970, when the National Environmental Policy Act was signed into law, there has been a great increase in literature pertaining to all aspects of the environment. Part of that literature relates to public concern with environmental problems. It seeks to determine the extent to which the attitudes have changed, whether this change has affected public behavior and the process of implementing public policy in response to these changes.

This bibliography presents a representative selection of that literature. The items cited deal with various aspects and manifestations of public concern; they include sociological studies of the process of attitude formation, attitude survey, opinion polls, narrative descriptions of public reactions to specific environmental matters, histories of the recent environmental movement, assessments of public reaction to the National Environmental Policy Act, philosophical discussions of environmental ethics, and anaylses of the politics and administration of environmental affairs.

The bibliography is divided into four sections:

1. Books--the Library of Congress call number and bibliographic notes.

2. Journal Articles--annotations have been included in some cases when the title alone is not sufficiently informative, or the article is of particular significance.

3. Bibliographies

4. Miscellaneous--includes book chapters and reports.

Many of the journal citations were derived from the bibliographic data base provided by the Library Services Division of CRS.

The growth of the environment as a political issue in Britian. British journal of political science, v. 6, Apr. 1976: 245-255.
"Content analysis of articles in the London Times on the environment, 1953-1973, reveals a consistent level of interest in the 1950s and 1960s and a marked increase in recent years. Concludes that there is a cumulative pattern of recognition of a broad environmental problem, rather than a series of individual problems, and that the environment itself is now a part of the news."
